ADAMAS RESIDENCIES 2023

European research residencies in law

Inspired by artist residencies, the Amadas residences aim to explore contemporary law issues by encouraging the exchange between lawyers, artists and researchers.

The Adamas residencies offer jurists from different law areas a place to carry out research in a unique cultural and historical heritage site, a laboratory for law and culture. For ten days or so, the residents have a space to freely work on their research. The residency is also an opportunity to exchange with artists and professionals from other backgrounds.

Since 2021, the Adamas programme has been run by the Château de Goutelas, Heritage site for Culture, in partnership with the Constitutional Council, the International Nuremberg Principles Academy, the International Association of Economic Law (A.I.D.E.) and the Institute for Studies and Research on Law and Justice (IERDJ).

CHÂTEAU DE GOUTELAS

Heritage site for Culture

The Château de Goutelas, located in Forez, in the heart of the Auvergne-Rhône-Alpes region, is a place of life, creation and numerous openings: shows, concerts, exhibitions, seminars, thematic meetings, research and creation residencies.

Goutelas, which has been awarded “Heritage site for Culture” by the French Ministry of Culture, has developed its project around three values that are part of its history: humanism, law and creation. In 1960, volunteers from all backgrounds mobilized to restore the castle, which was in danger of falling into ruins, driven by the desire to “do things together” and by the shared vision of a multicultural place. A number of lawyers took part in the work, helping to make Goutelas a place for reflection on the law, and for the agricultural world, a forum for the exchange of ideas.

Today, thanks to the originality of its history, Goutelas has become a place where contemporary creation mingles with debates to explore major contemporary issues: ecology and our relationship with life, human rights, new technologies, etc.

THE PARTNERS

The Constitutional Council

Every year, the Constitutional Council awards a prize to a thesis on constitutional justice and its history, or on the other competences of the Constitutional Council. The purpose of this prize is to consolidate the link between the University and the Constitutional Council, by remaining as close as possible to doctrinal research and by supporting a doctor of law, in particular by financing the publication of his or her work.

On the initiative of the President of the Constitutional Council, the winner of this thesis prize is invited to participate in the ADAMAS residencies.

THE PARTNERS

Institute for Studies and Research on Law and Justice (IERDJ)

The Institute for Studies and Research on Law and Justice was born from the merger of two entities with decades of experience: the Institut des Hautes Études sur la Justice on the one hand and the Mission de Recherche Droit et Justice on the other, whose missions it carries out and continues. The aim of the grouping is to promote original and prospective thinking, to develop and support research, and to mobilize and disseminate knowledge on standards, legal regulation, and the missions and functioning of justice, in all relevant disciplinary fields. Its action is aimed at all the professionals concerned, at research and training actors, as well as at a wider public, at the national, European and international levels.

The IERDJ awards two research prizes each year, the Jean Carbonnier Prize for research on law and justice and the Vendôme Prize, awarded jointly with the Ministry of Justice. These two prizes are awarded for first-rate research in law and social sciences (Jean Carbonnier Prize) or in the criminal field (Vendôme Prize). They demonstrate the IERDJ's support for young researchers working in the fields of law and justice.
